The Hagerman Group Welcomes Sheese, Nicks, Romes, Kemp

The Hagerman Group is pleased to announce four new additions to its team.

Zacree Sheese joined Hagerman Construction in Indianapolis as a project engineer. A graduate of Indiana State, Sheese holds a bachelor's degree in construction management and an associate's degree in architectural and construction technology. He most recently worked in residential construction for Pulte Homes. Sheese is a project engineer on the GETRAG-Chrysler transmission plant project in Tipton, Indiana.

Jason Nicks joined Hagerman Construction in Indianapolis as an estimator. He worked as an estimator and project engineer in Chicago before moving to Indianapolis. A graduate of Southern Illinois University, Nicks holds a bachelor's degree in construction management, and six years in the construction industry.

George W. Kemp joined GDH as an M.E.P. superintendent. Kemp has 29 years experience in the construction industry building schools, high-rise structures, hospitals, prisons, laboratories and clean rooms. He is currently at work on the law school expansion at the University of Notre Dame.

Richard Romes joined GDH as a project superintendent. Romes has 36 years experience in the construction industry, a great deal of which includes hotel and retail experience. He is currently working on the Hoosier Park Racino expansion in Anderson, Indiana.

Hagerman Construction, GDH and Hagerman Inc. are part of The Hagerman Group, a general contractor and construction manager with locations in Fort Wayne and Indianapolis.
